

Fanatics

Project

connection
space that works

www.connectionuk.com

Fanatics

Project

Opportunity

Leading sports merchandise firm Fanatics re-located into a 25,000sq ft former mill. The mill, which originally made machines for industry, was constructed between 1880 and the early 20th century, Stubbs has been sensitively restored and has seen many of the original features retained. ADT Workplace undertook the full design and refurbishment.

The international arm of Fanatics will use the move to develop a new base and further expansion plans. Fanatics CEO Andy Anson added: "This is a fantastic development for the company, its staff and for the city of Manchester. The reputation of Stubbs Mill as an historic textile centre, means there's a great synergy with our own product base in the sport."

connection
space that works

Tryst booths, console units & sofas

Fanatics

Project

Solution

Tryst booths were specified to create meeting and breakout spaces in open plan areas, providing privacy away from desk & social areas. The booths were placed in corridors to optimise the space as productive meeting areas. The Tryst booths were integrated with power & presentation facilities to supported team working and break out facilities away from traditional meeting rooms.

Tryst booths & console unit

Tryst booths