Opportunity

The head offices of global betting giant Flutter Entertainment in Dublin required a refresh to further support their blossoming workforce with a variety of zones throughout the workspace. Areas for collaboration, individual focus zones and breakout spaces were prominent throughout the office, formerly known as Paddy Towers.

Working alongside Staverton to best meet the requirements and objectives of the customer, various pieces of Connection furniture were specified in the 300,000 sq ft office space. The result is an aspirational space which not only provides the facilities to maximise employee productivity but is now a genuine destination office to attract new employees whilst empowering the existing workforce.

Located on the bottom floor of the building and complete with a football pitch and large screen is 'The Stadium'. This area of the building was designed to fulfil multiple functionalities, whether that be as an informal breakout space, or as an auditorium-style setting, perfect for presenting and collaborating.

Solution

Nomad booths and tables were specified within this area of the office and provide areas of quiet seclusion amidst the hustle and bustle of the rest of the open-plan space. The Nomad collaborative furniture provides much-needed flexibility within the workplace and allows employees to tailor the office to their own needs, utilising the castor bases to reposition if necessary.

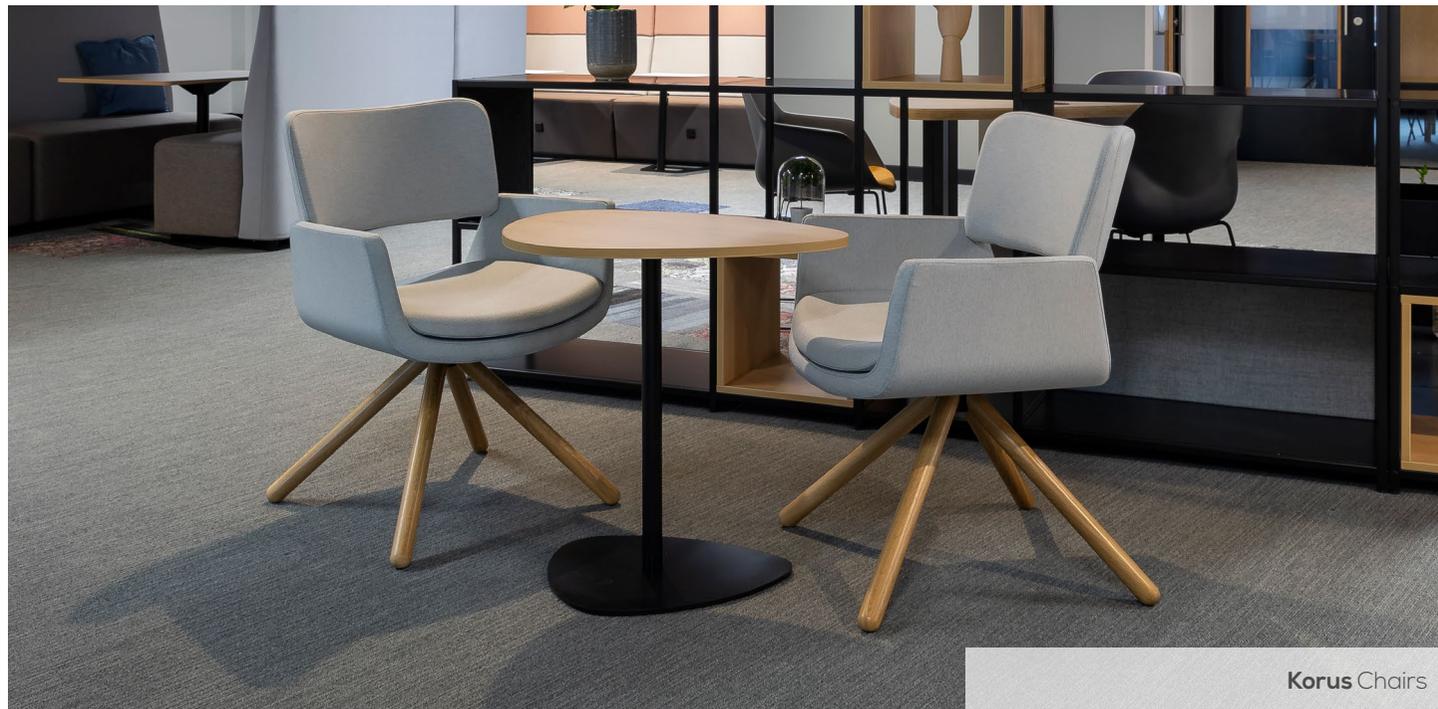

Another product specified to provide an area for quiet relaxation is the Peacework console booth. The lightweight external shell, manufactured from post-consumer waste, ensures both visual and acoustic privacy, making it the ideal spot in the office for a moment of silent tranquillity.

Korus chairs were positioned in a more informal setting, providing a breakout space for casual meetings. Specified in eye-catching colours, they deliver on both style and substance and give workers a comfortable space to unwind away from the rest of the busy office.
