Arcadis

Project

Opportunity

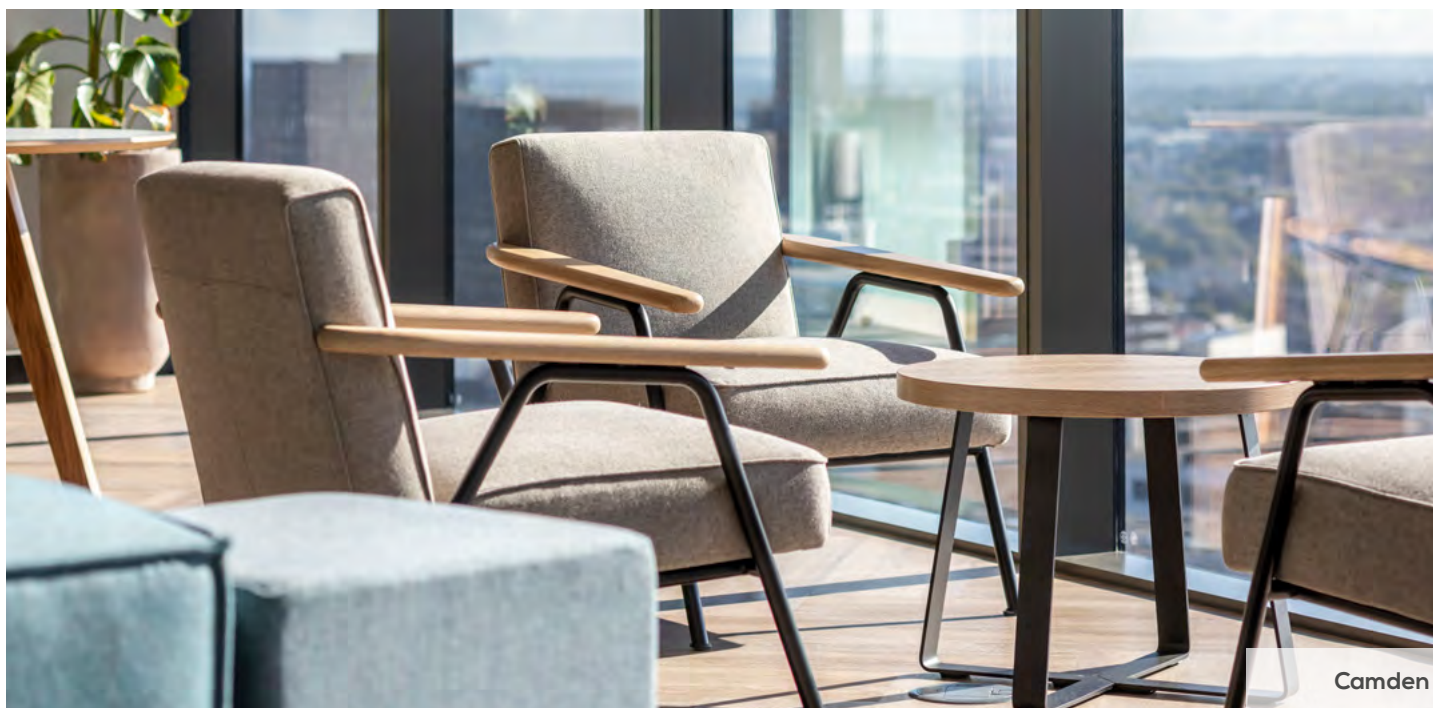

As is the case with many organisations nowadays, global design and engineering consultancy Arcadis required a space that reflected the changing ways of work within the company and more generally.

Moving across Birmingham city centre to a new 12,000sqft space on the 16th floor, Arcadis were particularly interested in collaborative spaces that supported productivity and social interaction, which in turn had a positive impact on employee wellbeing.

Solution

The move towards a collaborative work space, focussed on employee wellbeing and happiness, meant that the Connection product portfolio was ideal to meet the client's requirements. Hunters were selected to complete the project, which resulted in a captivating, agile workplace drowned in stunning natural light to keep the company workforce happy and motivated.

Throughout the space are numerous Co.Tables, a range named for its ability to promote and support co-working and collaboration. A flexible range with multiple options available, Co.Table is the perfect choice to facilitate a high-paced workplace culture, built upon agile work between teams. In this particular configuration, the poseur end encourages swift, productive meetings, and creates a space ideal for small-scale presentations and group brainstorm.

An innovative range of commercial furniture, the WorkWell family of products are designed to support mental and physical wellbeing by combining durability, aesthetics, comfort and simplicity of use. Both the WorkWell task and meeting chairs feature heavily at Arcadis, highlighting the adaptability and versatility of the ranges.

In the open-plan office, it's important for people to have quiet areas where they can escape the hustle and bustle and take a moment of downtime, or complete individual tasks.

Muse is the go-to solution for those looking to create these private zones. A combination of statement seating and private work booth, Muse was positioned as a breakaway sanctuary for relaxation, overlooking the city centre.
